Agricultural production and environmental protection: priorities reaffirmed by communities supported by OPODHA

As part of its training and community mobilization activities, the Organization of Peoples Working for the Development of Haiti (OPODHA) met with several local committees in the North and Northeast departments to discuss the development challenges facing the population. Present in 75 communities, the organization continues its support work through awareness sessions, training, and participatory exercises aimed at strengthening citizens' capacities and their involvement in community affairs management. During these meetings, community leaders emphasized the need to support agricultural production and protect the environment, two sectors considered essential for improving living conditions and local development.
